The Manor House, Ashby St. Ledgers.

THIS quiet and secluded parish has many associations of interest closely connected with it, not only to the student of history, but to many besides. It was the old home of the Catesby Family, members of which, in the 15th, 16th and 17th centuries, played a not unimportant part in the making of the History of England. John de Catesby was the first of the name with a proprietary interest in the place, and in the knowledge of after events there is a certain amount of irony in the fact that he was one of the Commissioners appointed in the reign of Richard II., for the suppression of unlawful assemblies. The family appears to have gained more and more importance during the years that followed until a reverse took place at the fatal field of Bosworth, when John Catesby, supporting his royal master, was taken prisoner, and three days afterwards was beheaded at Leicester. He was attainted, but very speedily his son, George, obtained a reversal of the attainder and with it the restitution of the family possessions. Sir William Catesby, grandson of George, with others was cited to appear before the Court of Star Chamber for harbouring Jesuits in their houses, but it is around the doings of Robert Catesby, son of the last named, that historical interest chiefly gathers, for he was the projector of the infamous Gunpowder Plot, which was discovered and happily frustrated on Nov. 5, 1605. The particulars of that plot are too well known to need repetition here, but in the room known as the Plot Room, at Ashby St. Ledgers, Manor House, Catesby and his co-conspirators held many of their meetings, and it was in the panelled Dining Hall, that news of the discovery of the Plot was brought to the conspirators as they sat at dinner, causing their immediate dispersal and flight.
